CHAPTER 1

The reader's experience of reading a novel is not only a matter of the interaction between the reader and the text, but also a matter of the interaction between the reader and the environment in which they read. This interaction can be seen as a process of meaning construction that is both internal and external. The reader's prior knowledge, expectations, and emotions play a significant role in how they interpret the text. The physical environment, such as the location, time of day, and presence of others, can also influence the reader's experience. The way the novel is presented, whether it be in a paper book or an e-book, can also impact how the reader engages with the text.
